

Ophthalmic Epidemiology and Prevention of Blindness (Editorial Board Member)

Ryo KAWASAKI (Japan)

Prof. Ryo Kawasaki is a Clinician-Scientist with a strong passion bringing epidemiological perspectives into clinical ophthalmology aiming to his ultimate goal of blindness prevention. He has been committed in preventive medicine and screening in the field of ophthalmology and other systemic diseases. He is also a chief project officer for the Artificial Intelligence Center for Medical Research and Application of Osaka University Hospital, and he himself is also involved in multiple project developing AI-based medical software and devices. He is also jointly appointed as an adjunct professor at Southern Denmark University. He has published more than 150 peer-reviewed papers. Prof. Kawasaki is an editorial board member of Ophthalmic Epidemiology and Japanese Journal of Ophthalmology.